The views, info on this website do not necessarily reflect the views of my employer.

All info is provided “AS IS” with no warranties.

this website:

If you use the info/material on this website, you have to:

1. reference to www.skilledtesting.com
2. write an email to me, where you use this info

I mean I took the time to collect/create all info, so you just need to copy+paste.

Imagine how much time it would cost for you to search all info.

And in comparison: how much time would it cost, that you just do the two things from above?

Thank you.

When you find anomalies, please tell me

(because definitely there are some - always there is, watch out, they are trying to bypass us)

- aehhhh - I mean on this website .

All info on this website was available to a certain date.

I am not accountable, if this info changed.

Please always go to the mentioned websites and look for yourself.

I would be happy, if you drop me an email about changes, so I can update the website.

Thank you

Erkan Yilmaz:

past:

I have been testing my whole life (knowingly + unknowingly).

The best testing-time was as a baby/child (unfortunately I do not remember all tests from that period).

Probably we all have this in common

I have been working in quality assurance for some IT-companies.

I passed the ISTQB Certified Tester foundation level (please note, that I say here: I passed the exam - if I am skilled or not you must find out by some means or other :-)) and

I am a member of ASQF e.v.

At present:

working in quality management in an IT-company.

If I do not answer fast enough, this is probably due to my obligations to my friends at work - perhaps you know some of them?

- BUGs Bunny

- hennaMolly -> we just call her anomaly
